ABSTRACT

This Market Data Retrieval report, based on reports from 85% of all public, private, and Catholic schools in the United States, found that the installed base of microcomputers in elementary and secondary schools exceeded 2.5 million in 1991-92, which is 550% higher than the first report in 1983-84. Other reported findings were: (1) installation of microcomputers is increasing at a lower rate each year, despite little doubt about the growing importance of the microcomputer as an instructional resource; (2) the installed base in Catholic and private schools, while much smaller than in public schools, grew at a higher percentage rate for the first time in recent years; (3) about 89% of installed microcomputers are in public schools, private schools have 5%, and Catholic schools about 6% of the total; (4) the microintensity index, i.e., a measure of the number of pupils per computer in a school, which has been steadily declining in recent years, ranged from a high of 30 students per computer in Mississippi to a low of 10 in Alaska in 1991-92. The tables that make up the major part of this report provide figures for enrollment, number of computers, and the microintensity index for public, private, and Catholic schools in each state and combined totals for the United States. SCHOOL MICROCOMPUTERS EXCEED 2.5 MILLION

June 12, 1992 Shelton, CT – Market Data Retrieval announced today that the installed base of microcomputers in elementary and secondary schools (K-12) exceeded 2.5 million for the first time during the 1991-92 school year. This installed base is in public, private, and Catholic schools. The latest year's total is almost 550% higher than the 386,000 installed computers during the 1983-84 school year, the first time comparable numbers were reported by MDR eight years ago.

In announcing MDR's latest figures, Sharon Sanford, Vice-President, Product Development for the company noted that "although the installed base of microcomputers in the school market is increasing at a lower percentage rate each year, there can be little doubt about the growing importance of the microcomputer as an instructional resource."

"Interestingly, the installed base in Catholic and private schools, while much smaller than the one in public schools, grew at higher percentage rates in the 1991-92 school year, for the first time in recent years," Ms. Sanford added.

Installed Microcomputers	1991-92 Percent Growth Over Prior Year
Public	9.2%
Private	24.6%
Catholic	16.1%
Total	10.3%

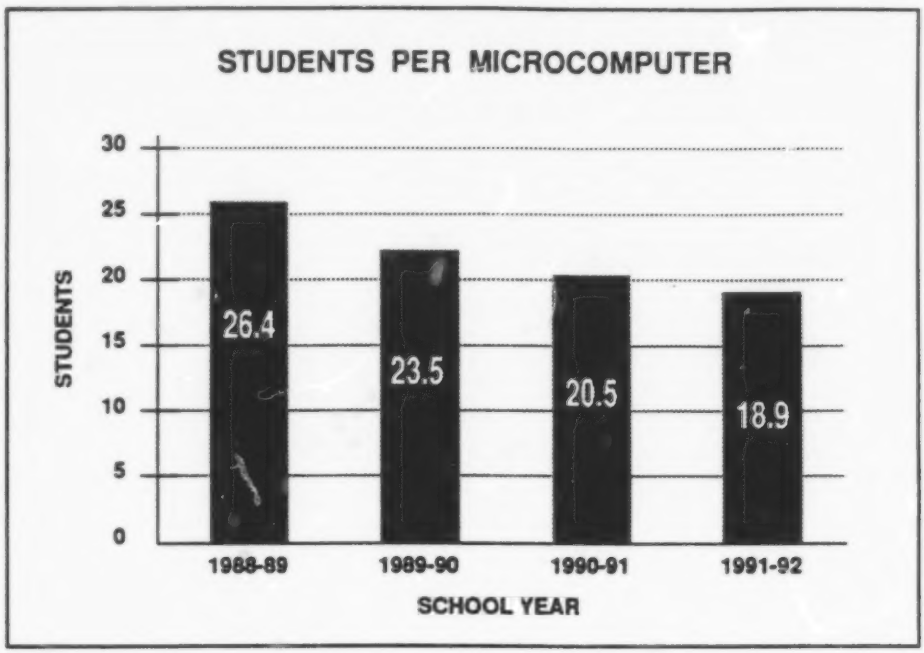
About 89% of all installed microcomputers are in public schools. Private schools have 5% and Catholic schools about 6% of the total installed base.

A commonly used industry index applied to microcomputers used in schools is micro-intensity, the number of students per microcomputer installed. It measures the ease of access to a computer by students. This index has been steadily declining in recent years, as the number of microcomputers being used in schools rises.



State microintensity levels, during school year 1991-92, range from a high of over 30 students per computer in Mississippi down to a low of 10 students per computer in Alaska.

MDR's estimates of microcomputer installations are based on reports from over 85% of all public, private, and Catholic schools.

Market Data Retrieval, a Dun & Bradstreet Company headquartered in Shelton, CT, with regional offices in Chicago, IL and San Bruno, CA, has been serving the information needs of businesses that market to educational institutions and public libraries, since MDR was founded in 1969. Its four information bases cover more than 200,000 pre-school, elementary, secondary, and higher educational institutions and libraries. It also provides educational marketers with the names of 3.0 million educators.
